This is apparently the Charles Painter House of the 1877 atlas, which was the dwelling of a farm once called Five Oaks. It was also called Dr. Campbell's house. It was shown as W.H. Campbell's on the 1915 Bromley atlas.

A large, 2 1/2-story Victorian house, its facade of small fieldstone blocks was probably added in recent times. Shingles still show at the south end of the main block. There is a rectangular louvered vent in the cross gable of the gable roof. The ends of the roof have interior chimneys covered by brick arches. The house has a screened front porch, and a frame wing on the south end. It is in fair condition, but is intruded upon by shopping centers and excavations to the south and west. The owner is listed as Harry B. Landay.
